BBC, Directors UK and Creative Skillset Announce New Directors' Training Scheme For Second Year

BBC Drama, Directors UK and Creative Skillset's High End TV Council are delighted to announce the second year of their directors' training scheme.

Following the success of this collaboration in 2015, this year will see nine drama directors mentored on one of the following continuing drama series: Doctors, River City, Holby City & Casualty.

Applications are now open for directors seeking to be trained on the award-winning daytime show Doctors, with entry closing at the beginning of November 2016. The remaining shows will begin their application process later in the year.

As part of their training, each director will observe and participate in the entire production process of an episode of Doctors, from pre to post production, and will ultimately take the helm for one full episode of the series to gain a directing credit. The scheme also offers the possibility of employment, after training as there is an ambition for the series to hire directors within nine months for a full directorial commission if the director has shown that they can meet the standards required.

The scheme is inviting applications from directors who have a genuine interest in the show and are passionate about developing their skills in continuing drama. Candidates are expected to demonstrate a solid knowledge of the drama, and is open to anyone who meets the requirements of the scheme.

Involved in the selection panel will be Anne Edyvean (Head of BBC Writersroom), Simon Nelson (Development Producer, BBC Writersroom), and a team of experienced TV directors and BBC Executives from Doctors.

This scheme is funded by the BBC, Directors UK and the High End TV Levy and is run by BBC Writersroom.

More information about the scheme can be found on the BBC website along with the application, via the link below:
