Directors UK and BBC Continuing Drama Directors' Training Scheme nominated for UK Television Diversity Award

Directors UK, BBC Writersroom and BBC Drama are delighted that the Continuing Drama Directors' Training Scheme has been nominated for a UK Television Diversity Award.

The collaboration has been nominated for the Partnership award, the winners will be announced by the Creative Diversity Network on Thursday 9 October.

Speaking today, Andrea Corbett, Skills and Career Development Manager for Directors UK said: "Since its inception in 2015, this scheme has been a vital steppingstone for directors ready to break into Continuing Drama. The fact that this collaboration has been nominated reaffirms the importance and power of training schemes: when they provide hands-on experience and a credit – they truly transform careers."

As part of the training, directors observe and participate in the entire production process of an episode of a show, from pre to postproduction, and ultimately take the helm for one full episode to gain a directing credit.

The scheme also offers the possibility of employment after training, as there is an ambition for the series to hire directors within nine months for a full directorial commission if the director has shown that they can meet the standards required.

The Continuing Drama Directors' Training Scheme is funded by BBC Drama and Directors UK and is run by BBC Writersroom, with support from BBC Studios. Applications are open to anyone who meets the requirements of the scheme, but are especially welcomed from BAME and female directors are encouraged as the industry recognises that both are currently under-represented within film and TV directing generally.

This year, the award-winning continuing dramas series EastEnders and Holby City have taken submissions for the scheme. This year's successful directors will be announced shortly.
